Just so you all know, there is a rumor that a company (don't know who) has offered $Millions (not sure how much?) to come in and demo the existing buildings for the salvage value. I don't know if there is any validity to this, but it is some of the word on the street.

I have not received any information from Glencore regarding demolition or salvage work they are conducting at CFAC. There are not any approvals from EPA needed prior to the demolition of the facilities. They will need to obtain any state and local government approvals/permits necessary to conduct the demolition.

I just got a call from Sam Wilson at the Daily Interlake- 406-758-4407. swilson@dailyinterlake.com

He wants to know if Glencore has provided any information about their securing a contractor to conduct some salvage and demolition work at the site. He also wants to know if there are any EPA approvals or permits required for this activity?

I reminded him that the NPL listing is currently the subject of a public comment period. I would imagine the answers to the Qs above are no, as the site is not formally a SF site and if listed, we will be overseeing a comprehensive assessment of the site to determine cleanup requirements.

Please advise if you have other suggested messages for response, or if you are able to contact him directly.

His deadline is COB today...
